

Launch of New Website for TPC

Technology Professionals Canada (TPC) recently unveiled its website refresh, featuring a smart new design and content.

“The goal was to revitalize a website that was outdated and required more functionality. We succeeded in doing so and are pleased with the result,” said TPC Managing Director Jaime Briltz, A.Sc.T.

The new TPC website is a significant step forward in advancing the profile of TPC which first emerged on the engineering technology and applied science profession scene four years ago.

Not only does the website provide general information about TPC, it explains in detail what the profession does as well as educational requirements and designations. It connects visitors to employment opportunities and educational institutes that offer training for the profession, and discusses the importance of accreditation and the findings of the Canadian Standards Association (CSA) 2011 report commissioned by TPC. The news section includes news releases, TPC media coverage as it happens, and publications and events.

To check out the website, go to www.technologyprofessionals.ca

Established in 2010, Technology Professionals Canada (TPC) is an alliance of technology professional associations from four provinces which together represent approximately 85 per cent of the profession in Canada: Alberta, British Columbia, Ontario, and Saskatchewan.